WHAT PEOPLE REALLY KNOW ABOUT TUBERCULOSIS

There are certain important facts about tuberculosis which should be known and applied. Tuberculosis is caused by a germ, the tubercle bacillus, which usually lodges in the lung, although it may occur in other parts of the body. Infection takes place as a result of contact either directly or indirectly with a person who has the disease in a communicable form. This may be done through kissing, coughing, sneezing, sleeping in one bed, or indirectly by spitting, use of common personal things or the use of common utensils.

Tuberculosis is not inherited. It is difficult to dislodge the old notion that tuberculosis is inherited. The reason is that contact within the family circle is usually close and if somebody in the family spreads tuberculosis it would be strange indeed if other members did not become infected.

Tuberculosis often exists without the presence of symptoms. In the beginning there are no sounds in the chest that a physician may detect. Overwork, lack of rest, and careless eating habits are often responsible for physical breakdown, and if tuberculosis germs enter the body they do serious damage.

Tuberculosis is curable. The first requisite is a good doctor, one who is well informed about tuberculosis and the newer methods of treating the disease. There is no specific drug or agent to cure tuberculosis. Rest, modern surgery, good food, and fresh air are of great importance in the cure. The sanatorium is the best place in which to get well. It has a two-fold objective; to cure the patient, and to protect the well people outside from contact with the disease.

There are two sides to the prevention of tuberculosis. By public health measures the spread of the disease from person to person must be prevented. The other side is the prevention of the outbreak of serious disease in a person who already has been infected.

Through this survey and class discussion we concluded that there were certain things which would increase general information about tuberculosis, reduce, and in time eradicate this terrible disease. Our conclusions were:

1. The essay contest in tuberculosis should be extended to the upper elementary grades. These essay contests stimulate students to seek information which would be valuable to elementary students.
